Communication
Monitoring
Proccess
No clear overview of outstanding payments
Invoices are sent physically by mail
Communication between departments happens through Excel lists and phone calls
Management cannot easily see how many invoices are overdue
Finance department creates weekly Excel lists of unpaid invoices
Customer service must contact finance to verify payments
No system to monitor the invoice collection process
Customer service calls customers manually from the list
Departments do not share information through one system
No way to measure performance of the collection process
The list is updated only once per week
Payments are manually imported into the system
Financial administration inefficiency at Carleon
Customer service does not have real-time payment information
Exact Globe is not fully utilised for monitoring overdue invoices
Finance department has 10 employees managing 25,000 invoices
Customer service sometimes calls customers who already paid
No automated invoice collection system
High workload for both finance and customer service
Information must be confirmed by contacting finance
Payments must be manually imported
Customer service depends on finance for payment confirmation
Customer service has no dedicated system to view payment data
Information sharing between departments is scattered
Information
Technology
People